

Sherrie Barch is the CEO of two Forbes' ranked top executive search firms and a leadership consulting company. An expert in the areas of leadership, team development, and diversity, her forward-thinking approach to work was recognized when she was chosen to participate in the "altMBA" program designed and led by leadership guru Seth Godin.

Sherrie's passion for storytelling and making room for serious and "heavy" conversations was a strong motivation for her to write her children's book, Heaven's Bell. The response to this book prompted her to expand that space for conversation and healing with her grief journal and memory book, Ring To Remember.

She is currently working on her third book, a business leadership fable designed to help new college graduates navigate the "real life stuff they don't teach you in school" about career conversations, conflicts, and challenges.

Born and raised in Northern Illinois, Sherrie earned B.A. and M.A. degrees in Communication from Western Illinois University.
